Long Live the Family by Robert Sedláček (2011) in Czech with English and Hebrew subtitles

Long Live the Family is a family drama about a couple managing to survive at a time of predatory capitalism. Libor, a senior bank manager, has been caught in a trap of financial skulduggery and is facing prison. Just one day remains for him to make a choice: answer for his decisions or run away? He sets on an escape with his wife and children through the countryside. An off-beat road movie, where the fate of one family shows a contemporary picture of our society.

Flower Buds by Zdeněk Jiráský (2011) in Czech with English and Hebrew subtitles

A story of the breakdown of a family living in a small town. Agata wants a happy life far from home, fully aware that her only hope is to escape and therefore betray those close to her. Honza believes in the purity and power of love, regardless of the circumstances under which it is born. Kamila looks confidently to the future and has no intention of accepting the misery of the present. Only Jarda knows that he will not change the world or himself. In his mind, his addiction to slot machines, which has led to a nearly impossible situation, is as certain as most gamblers' belief of an imminent win...

What Doesn't Kill You by Miloslav Šmídmajer (2009)
in Czech with English and Hebrew subtitles

Academy Award winning director Miloš Forman starring in an exciting and dramatic film, which was created during 5 years in Europe and America and offers an encounter with a number of Forman's close friends, co-workers, known actors and closest family. It is also enriched by unique scenes from his films and photographs from his personal archive. The documentary pursues the idea of how important it is to allow room for films that bring big emotions and that champion the highest values, such as the freedom of mankind. Forman reflects this theme of personal freedom with the rare cogency.

Generation Singles by Jana Počtová (2011) in Czech with English and Hebrew subtitles

An unreserved testimony of six characters - the film follows them within one year's time. The six singles openly speak about wasted chances to live in a couple, about fear from the merciless ticking of time, about sex and intimacy, about the offer of potential partners getting narrower and narrower, and about their parents and everyone else compelling them to finally find someone. What is the role of long-term relationships in our time? Are they an anachronism or rather a hardly achievable ideal?
